BRYAN DISCUSSES THE LARGER LIFE

Secretary of State Makes His Debut as Leader of Bible Study Class.

THEATER IS CROWDED

Commoner Said He Owes Everything He Is to the Christian

Washington yesterday afternoon before large meeting of men at the Columbia Theater. This was the first of a series of Sunday afternoon gatherings under auspices of the District Christian En-deavor, and the Secretary of State has pledged himself to lead other meetings. Mr. Bryan spoke on "The Larger Life" of spirituality as opposed to the merely material or intellectual life. He said in the start that his reason for attending was that he had observed a large class of young men who thought it broad-minded to scoff at creeds and religious and that he wished to shame such me out of the idea that skepticism is broad-nindedness.

The audience filled the theater completely. It comprised a great variety of faces of all ages, nationalities, and con-ditions. The seats and alses were crowd-ed, and men even hung onto the railings of the stairs. Several women were in one of the stage boxes, but next Sunday the gallery will be reserved for women.

Percy S. Foster, the Christian Endeaver candidate for one of the Commissionerships, led the singing of a number of songs, and, at the request of the Secretary of State, the audience sang, "Ill Go Where You Want Me to, Oh, Lord."

Mr. Bryan shared a song book with one of the members of the Parker Male Quartet and sang earnestly. During the singing the audience cause the "Chatanana" the gallery will be reserved for women singing the audience gave the "Chatauque saiute" to the flag and the Secretary by Secretary Is Applauded.

In spite of the sacredness of the day, the audience signified its pleasure of hearing the address of Mr. Bryan by applauding him loudly when he stepped on the stage, and although Mr. Bryan did not unbend from his earnest demeanor, his speech was interspersed with laughter and handelaping. Rexford L. Holmes, president of the District Christian Endeavor, introduced the secretary as "the world's greatest commoner and America's best loved statesman." The audience loudly attested ts approval of this characterization its approval of this characterization.

The burden of the address was that the soul is of greater importance than either the mind or the body, and Mr. Bryan said that his belief in this was the only thing that could have caused him to take an hour or more from the rest that he particularly needed at this time. He said that he was so indebted to the Christian religion for everything that he is or hopes to be that any part of his life that he might be able to give, he would consider but small recompense. He said that reli-gion not only gave men a better under-standing of spiritual life, but of the uses and value of the mind and body.

"If a man's spiritual leanness showed as lainly as his physical slimness, it would not be so hard to get men to think of their ould," said Mr. Bryan.

Disenses the Resurrection The discussion of the Secretary of State on the theory of the resurrection of the body brought laughter from the audience at the expense of science.

"We are told that there will be a resurrection of the body," said Mr. Bryan, "and I believe it. I have already seen bodies resurrected, according to the scientists, for they say that the body is rebuilt completely every seven years by nature. I am now on my eighth, according to this. that episodes in this play.

The last act is not altogether hopeless. The physician holds out the promise of the husband's restored health to his father-in-law. So there is something besides gloom to the end. It would indeed be difficult for any audience to depart from the theater without some restoration after the painful divulgence of two of the doctor's patients. He has them there as terrible examples. Terrible they truly as terrible examples. Terrible they truly are. It was a question which of his two women patients was more revolting, the unfortunate who could not be treated be-cause she had not the time, or the reckess girl who was struggling to win for nerself a place in the ballet at the opera.

Play Well Acted.

As far as sheer entertainment is con-cerned it is not to be denied that there are dull moments in "Damaged Goods." But they are more than compensated for by the tremendous dramatic force of the big moments, particularly the pittful climar of the second are. The play was climax of the second act. The play was rather a surprise. In many scenes it acted better than the book read. The characters for one thing, are thoroughly alive, human beings whom one can believe in and whose sorrows are pro-foundly real. They behave and talk like real people. Apropos of young men and his experience the Secretary of State said:
